FUND COMMENTARY

It has been a quarter encapsulated by the Business Day headline “SA listed property worst performer in 2020 in the world”. The fund’s benchmark, the FTSE/JSE All Property Index, has lost 48.1% since the start of the year, worse than general retailers and banks. In comparison, the All Share Index was down 21.4% and the All Bond Index fell 8.7%.

Over the past 12 months the All Property Index has returned -48.9%. This compares to the All Share Index return of -18.4% and the All Bond Index’s -2.9%. We struggle to understand why listed property has performed so badly compared to these sectors, which are also exposed to the local economy and have greater operational gearing.

The fund outperformed its benchmark after fees by a wide margin. The fund was positioned conservatively for a downturn and retail stress. This is cold comfort given the massive level of capital destruction experienced by investors. Our offering is an active building block fund providing access to listed property as an asset class. Consequently, we do not engage in market timing and keep cash levels deliberately low not to dilute property exposure. This hurts performance relative to more hybrid cash/property funds when the market falls.

The coronavirus impact is bad for property companies. Some tenants will fail, downsize, require rent reductions or go into business rescue, which is unfriendly to property owners. Others may not fail but may still withhold rent, especially if they are retailers that had to close shop in the lockdown. And property companies still need to service debt. Who is going to lease new office or retail space in this environment? Cash flow and valuation uncertainty are the problem. What is a building worth today if, with little idea of the future, the direct property transactional market is frozen?

We maintain that direct property valuations were overstated before the crisis and some companies may fail foul of debt covenant if now valued more appropriately. It has been our view that most REITs should not pay a dividend and rather repair their balance sheets and de-gear. A growing number of companies have announced just that.

Gearing is what kills companies in a downswing. Before the crisis REIT borrowing levels had been increasing, often to fund offshore diversification acquisition strategies. While gearing levels were far from being irresponsible, the higher gearing base makes the sector more vulnerable to this unprecedented situation. While yields look very enticing, there may not be a yield for some time, as there may be no dividend. This does not mean there is not enormous value in the sector – just, you can no longer buy it for income over the short term but for the recovery and its intrinsic value.

Property companies are an integral part of the financial system and it is in no one’s – banks, retailers, the SA Reserve Bank, Government, financial institutions – interest that they are distressed. We expect a mutually beneficial co-operative and pragmatic approach from all parties, especially after the lockdown has ended. An exceptional amount of bad news has been priced into many of the property companies. These may be once-in-a-lifetime buying levels if South Africa can emerge from this economic crisis bruised but alive.

The fund will continue to hold meaningful positions in a diversified selection of property shares we believe offer the most long-term value, with an eye on the relative outlook and risk.
